

MGH/McLean Psychiatry Residency Program

The MGH/McLean Psychiatry Residency Program seeks to train the next generation of psychiatrist leaders who will contribute to local, national, and world mental health through their provision of exceptional and compassionate patient care; engagement in scientific discovery; education of patients, multidisciplinary learners, and systems; and service to diverse communities. We provide a rigorous clinical education in a highly supportive environment, coupled with meaningful opportunities in research, teaching, and advocacy. Residents are exposed to diverse clinical settings across MGH and McLean, two world-renowned hospitals at the forefront of modern psychiatric practice. They receive expert teaching, supervision, and mentorship from devoted faculty members and are encouraged to pursue innovative, individualized learning plans specific to their interests and goals. Residents may choose to participate in specialized programs for research, medical education, psychodynamic psychotherapy, and global and community psychiatry. The residency prioritizes resident wellness and resident leadership in program change and growth. Residents are integrated into an inclusive community of highly enthusiastic and supportive faculty, alumni, and other trainees. They become lifelong learners and members of the MGH/McLean family.
